

Authorised Destruction Methods

Purpose

The purpose of this advice is to describe the appropriate destruction methods for various types of ACT Government records. This advice should be used in managing ACT Government records, and can also be applied to other government information and data holdings.

Background

ACT Government records can only be destroyed according to a records disposal schedule issued by the Director of Territory Records. Individual officers should generally not destroy ACT Government records, but should consult with their organisation's records manager to ensure all destructions are properly approved. The Territory Records Office provides a range of advice on the processes for approving the destruction of Government records.

The process of physically destroying records, once their destruction is approved, should ensure that the records, information and data are physically and irreversibly destroyed or deleted so that they are no longer usable or accessible. Destruction methods should also be environmentally sustainable.

Destroying hard copy records

Hard copy records, including paper, film, audiotape and photographs should be destroyed using one of the following methods:

- pulping
- shredding appropriate for any applicable Disseminating Limiting Marker or national security classification applied to the record
- burning in an industrial incinerator.

Burning should be used only in exceptional circumstances.

Destroying electronic records

Magnetic media such as tapes containing information that can be destroyed should be completely erased, not merely deleted or overwritten. This includes for storage devices such as computer hard drives.

For many other storage media it may be necessary to destroy the physical medium on which the records, information or data is stored. This includes cutting, crushing or shredding CD-ROM and DVD storage media.

Security considerations

The ACT Government's Protective Security Policy Framework may specify particular requirements for destroying information that is national security classified or sensitive for other reasons. At no time should ACT Government records be sent to rubbish tips, placed in industrial rubbish bins or placed in general recycling bins. Organisations should generally use professional office paper recycling services to destroy all of their hard copy records, information and data, and should consider using secure paper recycling services for all types of official documents.

For more information

See the ACT Government Protective Security Policy Framework

Further information is also available in the Protect Principle or from the Territory Records Office.